

Highway Board Asks for Bids On Two New Bridges At Twenty Mile Bend

TRAFFIC SURVEY One Bridge on Road 25 and

STARTED MONDAY
TALLAHASSEE, July 16 — An all-inclusive traffic survey, on a scale hitherto unattempted in the state, was inaugurated this week by the Florida State Road department.

Operators of all motor vehicles — passenger automobiles, trucks and buses — were halted during the week at 120 highway planning

An opinion deciding whether or not the voters of Florida will go to the polls on August 11 to choose two United States senators will be handed down by the Supreme Court of Florida, following arguments yesterday afternoon by lawyers who, according to

State's to give information on the experiences in traffic on the highways to field workers for the survey.

Tredway said that a total of 620 field stations will be established during the state's important points on state highways.

The survey, which started Monday, is expected to bring forth information upon which the state department can base plans for a highway safety program so that the greatest expense by the highways may be guaranteed for the greatest number of persons.

The survey is being conducted by the road department, but is being supervised by the United States Bureau of Highway Traffic.

The survey is one of three major parts of a master highway plan for the state. The second part of the highway facilities was started in 1964 and the inventory of highway facilities was completed in 1965. The survey is one of the first of revenues in relation to expenditure, will begin later.

The result was the tin-can "cans" explaining the treatment program. It is said the cans are heat-treated and somewhat crimped in the incinerator. They are then refilled and hauled to the street, where they are dumped in the five-ton roller. The packing waste makes the cans compact, the workmen then poured and topped over the cans with concrete packing. Specially constructed shoulders aid in holding the cans in place.

The cans are underfoot for six months and become a firm, firm mass.

Royal Palms, Orange Trees In Bloom Attract Crowds To The Florida Exhibit A Feature of Great Lakes Exposition

The story repeated below is fruit from moving off from grove to market, phosphate mines going full blast, cement plants, lumbering, the manufacture of turpentine, paper making, deep-sea fishing, hunting.

At the gates of the exhibit, there is no admission charge, is a marine fort as yet has not been started. Immediately behind it lies a decaying black iron cannon, the exhibit which this cannon was taken from the wreck of the Black Hawk, notorious old negro pirate.

Camping Popular With Many Boys
Nearly a half million boys will enjoy camping experiences in Boy Scout camps this summer, according to the National Camping Service of the Boy Scouts of America. For most Scouts it will be training for the first national Scout jamboree to be held at Washington, D. C., in 1937.

Camping has been one of the principal year-round activities of the Boy Scouts of America since its inception in 1910. There are some 542 permanent summer camps maintained by the local Boy Scout councils. These camps occupy a total of more than 54,000 acres that Scouts may truly call their own.

According to officials of the exhibit, this is the first time that the Boy Scouts of America have been invited to exhibit at the state fair.

As you look at them, you are certain that you actually are on Florida. The exhibit is a reproduction of the state with its own eyes, watching persons play and work, seeing the sun go down and evening begin.

Ten of these dioramas, the most gorgeous of the 26, are set up in the main saloon of the manor.

Other dioramas in this room show the beautiful Hialeah race track, with horses galloping around the quarter-mile turn; the Singing Tower at Mountain Lake, sunset on the Suwannee river, with darkies singing Stephen Foster songs that come from an amplifier concealed in a river cabin; the sun setting on the Suwannee river, with darkies singing Stephen Foster songs that come from an amplifier concealed in a river cabin; the sun setting on the Suwannee river, with darkies singing Stephen Foster songs that come from an amplifier concealed in a river cabin.

Baseball Goes to Field With Farm Hand Who Attaches Radio to Plow

Baseball with "sound effect," as tried out by Herschel Baty, of Panagout, Ark., made a decidedly with the originator, but certainly seekers are causing him no little worry.

Baty, a 22-year-old farmer, equipped his cultivator with a radio so he could enjoy "old time" songs and get the baseball scores while he worked the cotton and the corn.

After four days, Fritz Schug, one of three brothers owning the 2,800-acre plantation on which Baty worked, decided Baty had better take the darned thing off. "Everybody passing along the road in wagons, afoot and in cars, heard the radio," Mr. Schug complained.

His young son, Ray Schug, works with Baty. Baseball fans, especially fond of the Cardinals, Baty and the young Schug installed batteries and a radio on the tongue of the cultivator and used the frame for the "ground."

Royal Palms Give Way to Fire and Hoe

Extirpation of the wild royal palm—which may have canopied Florida in the time of Ponce de Leon—is in prospect as drainage and road building increase fire hazards, in the opinion of O. P. Cook of the Bureau of Plant Industry.

Only one group of these palm has been preserved and made accessible to the public, at the Royal Palm Park southwest of Homestead, and a part of this small reservation burned a few years ago.

The pioneer period of cutting and burning, lasting more than three centuries, reduced the royal palms to a few scattered groups protected from fire by open water deep swamps.

Royal palms may grow to a height of 100 feet or more, their straight, tapering trunks, ash-gray in color, ending in a plume of rich green leaves. When young they grow as forest undergrowth and do better in groves and scrub-berlands than when set along streets and in open grounds. Thousands of young palms are destroyed every year, says Mr. Cook. Seeds are scattered by birds, but the seedlings, which look like coarse grass, often are hoed out as weeds.

During the last two years the government has financed ninety camps for unemployed girls ranging from two to three months.

Under the plan outlined by Mr. Williams, the girls will give a combination course of home economics, recreation supervision and health training. After they leave the camps, federal employment agencies will aid them in securing jobs.

RELIEF CAMPS FOR JOBLESS GIRLS

The announcement made by Deputy Works Progress administrator Aubrey Williams that part of $71,250,000 allotted the National Youth Administration will be used to establish fifty camps for needy unemployed girls similar to the Civilian Conservation Corps for unemployed young men will undoubtedly receive generous public approval.

The camps will all be drawn from relief rolls. Mr. Williams said they will engage in educational vocations and recreational projects, as well as doing light handicapping and similar work.

According to present plans the camps will be located in almost all of the 48 states. Girls under 18 of relief.

The camps will be administered directly by the Works Progress Administration, without the aid of state and local officials, which characterizes CCC camps.

Close to waterfront level lies the public square, a palm-shaded garden surrounded by shops and public buildings such as the Town

Hall, where Napoleon mounted the Elban throne; the church, on the steps of which he knelt for an inaugural Te Deum; and the Hotel of the Elban Bee, with a bright awning shading its veranda.

Across the sun-soaked colors of houses and the crimson or violet wings of sailboats in the harbor spreads the gloom of industry—black smoke from the blast furnaces for smelting iron ore, explaining the Greek name for Elba: "Isot" (black).

Elba felt the Napoleonic Bonaparte walk when Prince Napoleon Bonaparte, nephew of the Little Corporal, visited there in the company of Alexandre-Dumas, who hurried away to state at the sister island of Monte Cristo, with literary consequences that are well known. An even earlier and more beloved visitor arrived in 1802, when of the Hugos, for his poem, "The Emperor," decided to bring along the infant son, Victor, to thrive on the island's climate.

The main axis of Elba's drama, however, was of chief musical concern in which the obscure Mediterranean spot was co-starred with Napoleon. On May 3, 1814, after a five months' seige by British vessels, the innocent and unsuspecting islanders learned that peace and the British flag had reached the harbor of Portoferraio, bringing them the honor of being a kingdom and a real live second-hand emperor to be their king. Lights, music!

On the day after his pocket town abaze with festive candles, natives saluted out to greet the unexpected pleasure of a king with song.

On May 4, Napoleon landed, and up went the flag which he had hoisted for his pocket empire; three bees on a broad orange stripe diagonally crossing a white field. His throne was only a couch draped with paper roses, but the show went on nevertheless. Receptions, balls and formal presentations at court put gloves on many Elbans for the first time in their lives. Fingers were cheerfully blistered with much playing of mandolins, and Napoleon was so besieged with serenades and informal chatty visits he had to take refuge in a fortified palace on the heights at the top of Portoferraio's Grand Staircase, the city main street.

Because he had windmills torn down in preparing the villa to be his Elban headquarters, his subjects nicknamed it Windmill Palace. Its simple flat front in three sections and the modest garden, after years of neglect, are being restored.

Napoleon played so well the role of a busy bee king in a little busy kingdom, even with bees on the flag, that Europe breathed a sigh of relief and forgot the bee in his bonnet. At his summer villa of San Martino, on a mountain ridge three miles southwest of Portoferraio, he was masqueraded as a cotemporary gentleman, with a half dozen cows, a flock of chickens, and a vegetable garden.

On the day after his arrival Napoleon set out to explore the length and breadth of his miniature kingdom (length, 1 mile, breadth, about 5). Finding that digging for iron ore was Elba's main occupation and preoccupation as well, he tried to encourage agriculture: grape vines and fruit trees are pointed out as having been planted at his instigation.

He had roads built, marshes drained, and villas constructed. Me-even undertook a program of colonization, extending his empire to embrace the nearby dots of Pianosa and Palmarola. But the greatest improvement of all, he gave Elba a basis for national pride.

At last the island could boast of a flag, a court, a king and an army of the Elbans—a past. For after his 300 days of breathing space, during which he had played the Elban game as valiantly as he had formerly fought—the King of Elba abdicated and set off with a fleet of four ships and an army of several hundred men hoping to conquer Europe, but finding instead the gloomy road that led toward Waterloo to St. Helena.

ELECTRIC

BEING a great magician, your silent servant... electricity... easily impersonates the world's greatest chefs. With automatic time and temperature control he takes all the guesswork out of cooking. He cooks fast, keeps the concentrated heat in the stove and out of the kitchen. When he's on the job your worries are over—and you are one step nearer the miracle of a complete, all-electric kitchen.

The modern magic of an electric range adds beauty and convenience to your kitchen. With thrifty electric cooking, vitamins are preserved and meals are tasty, appetizing, healthful.

You probably already enjoy the magic service of electric refrigeration. Your next step is the electric range. Then, step-by-step, the modern water heater and sanitary dishwasher. Your silent servant—electricity—can perform miracles with all of them.
